YOUR CHILDREN
by Olive Roberts Barton

All parents should know a certain point important in bringing up children:

The child has to be satisfied.

When a child thinks up something to do we call it impulse. Block that impulse and what happens? The mind rises, but give up, even though the child, at the time appears content enough to stop what he has been doing. The child and his mind are two separate things in a way. His mind works without a "by your leave." It goes on changing, planning going ahead, or going back, much as though it were a flower growing in a flower pot on top of his shoulders.

Flower Keeps Growing

When the child stops the flower keeps on. You can put a thimble on the end of one of the tender branches, but that won't matter. The branch will bend, with a twist in it, and turn around and grow in another direction, that is all. It won't be satisfied to stop—it can't stop. It has to go on developing until nature says, "This is the end of that branch. It is finished."

We can compare every "impulse" of a child's mind to a branch in the flower. Once started it has to go on to the finish. If not it will finish itself in some other way. Interrupted impulse is not a good thing in most circumstances.

Let us take a child who wants to take an old clock apart. He gets the screw driver and sets about it, all keyed up with curiosity. Just when his interest is at its height, his mother comes in and says, "You can't do that, son."

Inquisitiveness Balked

"But it's just an old alarm clock I found up in the attic! It's no good. I want to learn about clocks."

"Just the same I call it destructive. Take it back."

She has put a thimble on the tip of a branch just starting to sprout, but containing the force and life-germ of all sprouts. And by nipping or trying to nip it, she has only added force and strength to the impulse.

Now Johnny isn't through with clocks. His mind is not satisfied. The curiosity once inspired is now a full-fledged torrent of determination. Interference has only strengthened it.

One day when his mother is out, (notice the twist now) he locks his door (and takes down his own mantel clock. He takes out every bolt, screw and wheel. His curiosity has been satisfied, but something else has been born, secretiveness and cunning. His mind has resorted to subterfuge in order to find a relief for that driving urge of curiosity. The thimbls did not work.

Parents: Watch Your Vetoes!

There are hundreds of impulses. Curiosity is merely one of them. But each time an impulse is stopped by outside means, not only is the impulse strengthened but it bears unhealthy progeny.

This is why we parents need to choose only the absolutely necessary things to veto. We cannot, of course, give the children their own way always. They do go off at a tangent sometimes. But the direct honest older mind is never the outcome of a thwarted younger mind. The parent who constantly says "no" or interrupts innocent-enough acts too often cannot expect a forthright mind to be the result in later years.

"Murders in the Zoo' Latest Mystery Melodrama

Savage beasts, motivated by a diatic madman, spread death and ruin through "Murders in the Zoo," mystery melodrama currently showing at the Saenger theater, with Charlie Ruggles, Lionel Atwill, Kathleen Burke (the Panther Woman), Randolph Scott, John Lodge and Gail Patrick among the actual and prospective victims.

Atwill, an eminent zoologist, is the madman—madly jealous of his wife, Miss Burke. When, during the course of a big-game expedition in India, another man, drunk, kisses her, he abducts him, sews up his lips and leaves him in the jungle at the mercies of roving tigers.

Another admirer of his wife pops up aboard the vessel carrying them back to the United States. Atwill says nothing however, until after they have landed. Then he invites the admirer to a dinner which is being given for the city's wealthy at the zoo, to open a fund-raising drive for the institution. At the height of the festivities the latter suddenly screams, clasps and dies. The wife is sure her husband engineered the killing. Before she can voice her suspicions, however, she is dead, too.

Scott, a young scientist attached to the Zoo staff, findish evidence linking Atwill to the two murders. Atwill attacks him, then turns the animals loose. The picture reaches a breathless climax during the debacle which follows.

Editorial By Alex. H. Washburn

TIRED of the trickery of international money-changers the United States today turned loose of the gold-dollar abroad, allowing it to find its own level in the company of world currencies. While this is not true inflation as we understand the word, the effect has been to boost American prices. Mr. Roosevelt's action should be regarded, however, as an equalization of the past rather than inflation for the future.

You will better understand today's happenings if you chanced to read Garet Garrett's article "The Economic Drive Against the United States" in last week's Saturday Evening Post.

Our leaders' theory is that America was coming out of the depression last summer and fall, when Europe began juggling her currency against our dollar in order to get foreign goods over our tariff wall and so hang on to the coat-tails of reviving American prosperity.

That this prosperity failed to materialize, Mr. Garrett blames on the fact that millions of dollars' worth of foreign goods displaced American-manufactured brands in the domestic market during the winter—stealing away our margin of recovery.

XXX

I can give you Mr. Garrett's point in this one paragraph:

When the British pound went off the gold-standard it dropped from its normal value of $4.87 in American money to about $3.20. A British manufacturer selling shoes at one pound per pair would get in England the equivalent of only $3.20 in American money. But if he shipped them to the United States he would get $4.87—or enough more to pay the freight, the tariff, and allow a handsome profit. Then the British government, Mr. Ghrrett tells us, helped its manufacturers hold this advantage by eftablishing a ¾-billion-dollar fund with which to juggle currencies. When the pound tried to climb back up t opar, $4.87, the British sold pounds and bought dollars, making the pound cheaper, the dollar dearer, and continuing to maintain the foreigner's advantage. Now, when the United States has done, is to drop the value of our dollar abroad so that the British manufacturer attempting to sell shoes over here will get only the $3.20 he would have gotten in London. Naturally he can't pay the freight and tariff any longer—and the invaders will be turned back.

In today's paper you read that the State Corporation Commission has completed its fact-finding tribunal for determining public utility rates. I do know Mr. Eaton, the accountant member, or Mr. Lasley, the attorney-member; but if George L. Hess of El Dorado, the engineer-member, is typical of the other selections, then it is recent group of investigators.

Mr. Hess is a well known evaluation engineer, with wide experience in judging natural-gas production and transmission costs. He was successfully used by the City of Fort Smith in a fight against a gas company in years ago, when I knew Mr. Hess very well, both of us living at El Dorado.

Consumers should look to the Corporation Commission and its fact-finding tribunal for a fair and result-getting survey of public utility rates in Arkansas. It is a battle no one else can successfully attempt. But united as a state, in the Corporation Commission, we have a chance to meet the interconnected utility concerns on equal ground.

Six British engineers, working in Russia for an attractive wage, are "framed" on third-degree evidence of terrorized Russian peasants, and five are convicted of damaging the very machinery they were operating for the Soviet government. Three of the five are exiled, two sentenced to prison.

One doesn't blame the British. Russia's inferiority complex pains all civilized nations.

Special Session Is Considered Likely on Beer and Taxes

Terrific Drop in Property Assessments Puts State in Desperate Plight

CRISIS IN SCHOOLS

Million Revenue Expected of Beer—Futrell's Position Uncertain

By J. C. STARK
Associated Press Staff Writer

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—The signs of an impending special session of the Arkansas legislature this summer or fall are becoming increasingly apparent.

The move for legislation to legalize 3.2 per cent beer for revenue is only one of the things pointing to a call.

As much as Governor Futrell would like to avoid a special session, developments that have followed each other in swift succession since the regular session adjourned on March 9 indicate the difficulty of long delaying a special session.

The tax situation is the most pressing problem that may lead to a call. Governor Futrell himself has told advocates of beer legislation that an overhauling of the tax system is more important at this time than beer legislation.

General Taxes Far Down

The disclosure of the tremendous drop in 1932 general real and personal property tax assessments, on which collections are being made this year, has stimulated the movement for a special session.

The decrease of assessments to the lowest level since 1916 was a distinct surprise to state tax officials who expected a heavy decline in valuations but not of the proportions that developed.

On the basis of the 1932 assessments, totaling $171,663,856, a decrease of $83,365,118 from the 1931 figures, the operation of the state and county governments and the public school system are sharply reduced budgets will be extremely difficult.

Act 298 of 1933, which become a law without the governor's signature, is generally interpreted to contribute to the heavy delinquencies in tax payments this year. It extends the period for redemption of tax-forfeited property from two years to four years and reduces the penalty for non-payment from 10 per cent to 3 per cent.

Some county tax collectors estimate that collections this year will drop to from 25 to 50 per cent.

The tax problem has brought suggestions from some legislators to Governor Futrell that a sales tax be enacted. His attitude on this now has not been disclosed, although at the regular session he was committed against any new forms of taxation.

School Plight Desperate

The plight of the common school system presents another serious problem. Schools in some sections more are being operated on a tuition basis because of fallen revenues and the governor is expected to increase greatly the next term.

The way a special session committee of the Arkansas Education Association has charged the 1933 legislature with the greatest diversion of school funds to other purposes ever made by an Arkansas legislature, an amount estimated by the committee at $825,000.

A statement by the committee also asserted that the abolition of county superintendents and county boards of education and reorganization of the state department of education "destroyed the system which was the model of the nation but has inhabitual therefor the most antiquated system in the United States."

Advocates of liter legalization content Arkansas is losing a large amount of revenue to bordering states which now have beer and that it is taking money out of the state for other purposes as well.

Million From Beer

Some of these estimate that a beer tax in Arkansas would produce as much as $1,000,000 a year of new revenue.

Governor Futrell says he will not call a special session to legalize beer in any event unless two-thirds of the members of the legislature agree in advance upon a beer measure and advocates of the legislation now are working these pledges.

Whatever their success, the governor is not expected to call a special session until after the July 18 referendum on prohibition when the Arkansas electors will vote on the question of ratification or rejection of the proposed new amendment to the constitution of the United States which would repeal he Eighteenth amendment.

Upon the result of that referendum may depend the question of a special session.

Mayor Boyett Announces His Organization of City Council

With savings of $5,000 assured for the 1933 budget and more to come, and the appointment of department heads and council committees, Hope's new city administration took office Tuesday night at the council meeting officially ushering in the fiscal year.

Clarence E. Baker returned to the office of chief of police, and J. K. Sale became chief of the fire department, both appointments by Mayor Ruff Boyett being confirmed by the council.

Dr. Don Smith was elected city health officer. The Board of Health was announced as follows:

Dr. J. H. Weaver, chairman; Dr. P. B. Carrigan, Dr. A. C. Kolb, and E. F. Haddin, ex-officio secretary.

With Chief Baker in the police department will be the following officers: Dick Arnett, John Turner and Homer Burke. Mr. Arnett returning to a department he left two years ago to accept a position as special officer for the Missouri Pacific. Chief Baker has been a deputy for Sheriff John Lawson the last two years. Chief Sale will organize the fire department April 23, it was said.

Expense reductions announced Tuesday night approximated $2,520 in operation of the municipal water and light plant, and $2,500 for the work of the street committee.

Two resignations offered by the fire committee were accepted by the council, James Embree dropping from $112.50 to $100 a month as driver of the fire truck; Harvey Thomas, assistant, from $100 to $87.50. Further salary schedules for this department have not been fixed, it is believed.

F. Y. Trimble was approved by the council as a new member of the board of commissioners of Hope Water & Sewer District, to serve with R. M. LeGrone and E. S. Greening. The board was originally comprised by Mr. LaGrone, W. Y. Foster and A. L. Betts, the latter two resigning within the last year.

The council voted a permit to Joe Coleman to construct a filling station at his residence at the intersection of Hervey and Third streets. Protesting owners of neighboring property were represented again Tuesday night by Ernest O'Neal, but after discussion through several preceding meetings the council in executive session approved the permit.

British Convicted, to Boycott Russia

Empire Strikes 29-Million-Dollar Blow Against Soviet Trade

LONDON, Eng. —(AP)— Great Britain summoned the conviction of British engineers in Moscow by declaring Wednesday a partial embargo against Soviet goods which will shut out approximately 80 per cent of Russia's imports in to the United Kingdom.

On the basis of current trade figures the embargo, which becomes effective April 30, will bar imports aggregating $,600,000 pounds annually (approximately 29 million dollars at the present rate of exchange).

A proclamation signed by King George specifies imported articles of cotton, butter, wheat, oats, barley, petroleum oils, wood and timber.

If the sentences of the convicted men are commuted a possibility is seen for lifting the embargo.

2 Britishers Imprisoned

MOSCOW Russia—(AP)—Two of the six British electrical engineers tried on charges of espionage, bribery and sabotage, were given prison sentences early Wednesday, three were ordered deported and the other was acquitted.

Ten of their Russian co-defendants were sentenced to terms up to 10 years. One was acquitted.

Three judges comprising the court announced the verdict after nine hours and 15 minutes of deliberation.

W. H. McDonald, the only one of the British employes of the Metropolitan-Vickers electrical firm to plead guilty, received a two-year prison sentence.

L. C. Thornton, the company's chief construction engineer in Russia, who was described as a military spy by Prosecutor Andrey Bishinsky, was was sentenced to a three-year term.

Allan Monkhouse, the Metropolitan Vickers director in Russia; John Cushny, an engineer, and Charles Nordwall were ordered deported within three days. They will not be allowed to return to Soviet Russia within five years.

A. W. Gregory, charges against whom were withdrawn by the prosecutor, was acquitted. V. I. Ziebert, who the prosecutor said had engaged in no serious sabotaging activity, was the only Russian freed of the charges.

One Woman Sentenced

The only woman defendant, Anna Kutuzova, secretary of Monkhouse, was sentenced to 1½ years imprisonment. The verdict carried no deportation. They would then be allowed to live in Soviet Russia without restrictions.

The Russians who received the heaviest sentences also suffered confiscation of their property.

The last procedure of the trial was a series of final statements from each of the defendants. Perhaps the most dramatic of these came from Monkhouse, who told the court that a man of his profession could no more wreck

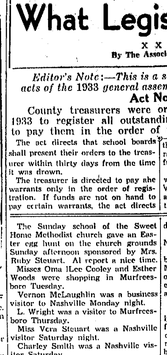
Petroleum Contributes to your welfare



FROM the most ragged little urchin to the beautifully gowned "Colonel's Lady", petroleum has contributed tremendously in the past 35 years to the welfare of every American—especially to those of us who live in the five Southwestern States.

The deluge of petroleum that began with the discovery of oil in Texas at Corsicana in 1896 has changed the whole fiber and destiny of the Southwest. It has speeded the growth of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and New Mexico by at least fifty years. It has given employment, opportunity and wealth directly to hundreds of thousands of Southwestern families—today it directly affects more than one million Southwestern people.

It has not been long since oil money began to assist in replacing two-room frame schoolhouses with magnificent institutions of learning. Hospitals that rank with the finest in the world have been the gifts of public-spirited citizens whose bleak farms were suddenly transformed into profitable oil fields.

In thirty-five years the population of the Southwest has almost trebled. It increased nearly 20% between 1920 and 1930—to a population of more than twelve and one-half millions. Hamlets have grown into great cities almost overnight—and oil is chiefly responsible.

In Texas alone, the value of manufactured products has leaped from less than $100,000,000 to more than $1,200,000,000, with petroleum accounting for nearly 40 per cent of the total. In the other Southwestern States the development has been equally as remarkable.

Figures and statistics are dry reading. But they are indispustable proof of the part petroleum is playing in the growth of your homeland . . . of what petroleum contributes to your welfare.

In 1931 Southwestern landowners and their assignees received around $160,000,000 in royalties, lease bonuses, leases and rentals. Another $440,000,000 at least went for materials, supplies and field service. It is estimated that a total of not less than TWO BILLION DOLLARS a year is paid into the pockets of Southwestern residents directly by petroleum and its products. In 1932—alone—the petroleum industry paid to the States of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and New Mexico more than $65,000,000 in the single item of gasoline taxes.

The welfare of all who live here in the great Southwest is united inseparably with the welfare of petroleum—let us all keep this common welfare constantly in mind.

France Still Seeks Security

By BRUCE CATTON
NEA Editorial Writer

IF the war-weary shade of old Georges Clemenceau stalks within ear-shot of troubled Europe these days, it must be entertaining some curious reflections on the vanity of human endeavors.

At the Versailles peace conference, Clemenceau had but one slogan—Security for France. Everything else was subordinated to this; by sheer force of his personality and skill in negotiation, Clemenceau wove this thesis deeply into the treaty.

Then, when was there, trying vainly to get a peace listed on the points, a peace of justice and clemency, and liberal course, for all that he had just campaigned across Europe on a "Hang the Kaiser!" platform, was ready to help him. But Clemenceau triumphed. France must be rendered forever safe from attack. Whatever happened, the old militaristic clique in Germany was to be made impotent. There would be no more threats from across the Rhine.

Well, Clemenceau had his way. The treaty was his, in its essentials. Germany was left crushed, France rose triumphant.

And today, less than 15 years after that treaty was put together, the menace from beyond the Rhine is on its feet again. The peace of Europe is once more threatened by the old Franco-German quarrel. The old militaristic crowd has been revived. France talks openly of her readiness to fight for what she has gained. Bayonets glisten along half a dozen frontiers.

This, then, is the final fruits of the treaty which, if it did nothing else, was to remove France forever from the danger of war with Germany.

Woodrow Wilson and Cynic Clemenceau met, and the cynic won; and the current of world history today seems to be bent on proving that the cynic was not as good a guide to practical affairs as the idealist would have been.

Seems today, anyway, as though the old adage of men the hard-headed, disillusioned and severely "practical" man can be the least reliable of leaders. The scheme that the visionary Wilson outlined in 1918 was probably very impractical; but would it have resulted in a worse all-around mess than the one which now threatens the peace of the world?

Nevertheless, He Did It

WHEN Franklin D. Roosevelt announced during the campaign that if elected he would cut 25 per cent from the government's operating budget he was greeted by a loud chorus of derision. Long articles were written to prove that the job was simply impossible. His foes laughed at him; his friends uneasily wished that he would think before he spoke.

To date Mr. Roosevelt has been president a little more than a month; and the 25 per cent reduction that he promised has been made, with a little margin to spare.

To make it, of course, he had to tread heavily on some very sensitive toes and beat down influential opposition in his own party. But he didn't seem to mind doing it; and today this countryman are confronted by the novel and agreeable sight of a president who believes that a campaign promise means just exactly what it says.

Revenue From Beer

WHEN the beer bill was being put through Congress, it was estimated that the taxes accruing from the sale of the beverage would bring the federal treasury approximately $150,000,000 a year. It begins to look now as if this estimate were far too low.

To yield that much revenue, the beer industry would have to sell 30,000,000 barrels a year—an average of slightly more than 82,000 barrels a day. During the first 24 hours of legal beer, reliable estimates put the total sales at between 1,000,000 and 1,500,000 barrels.

To be sure, sales will not continue in anything like that volume. But even if they go on only at a tenth of that rate—which is surely a conservative estimate—the tax revenue will be far greater than $150,000,000 a year.

It looks as if the beer tax will be a far more important revenue producer than anyone had dared to hope.

So They Say!

Men thought they had achieved a perfect peace, but instead they found to the contrary.—Pope Pius.

What Legislature Did

Editor's Note:—This is a series of articles explaining acts of the 1933 general assembly.

Act No. 3

Governor Futrell's campaign pledge to oust the old state highway commission and reorganize the highway department was authorized by enactment of Act No. 3 of 1933.

It took effect February 1, and a new commission of five members was immediately appointed.

Pursuant to terms of the act, the commission appointed a state director of highways, whose duties are those of chief executive of the department, and are similar to those therefore exercised by the chairman of the highway commission.

The act also permitted the appointment of a director of highway maintenance.

Acting under terms of Act No. 3, the commission has reduced the number of highway districts from 10 to seven and reorganized them as maintenance districts under a district engineer.

The chairman of the highway commission formerly drew a salary of $5,000 a year, but under the new act, as executive chairman, nor any of the members receive salaries. Their only compensation is $10 a day while attending meetings of the commission. They also receive their expenses to and from meetings.

Rainey Also Speaks

"There is strong sentiment throughout the country for some inflation," the Illinois Democrat said. "Sentiment is rapidly crystalizing in the house for it. I personally favor it."

Rainey said he was an "irreconcilable Hoover to 1 man" and preferred expansion through silver. "I think the United States can go ahead on a plan to remonetize silver without an agreement with England and France, but it will be better if we can get concurrency with those countries."

The speaker made it clear that he was giving his personal views. He explained he had not discussed silver with President Roosevelt and was unaware of the administration's attitude.

Rajah and Ruth

A day or so before the big league season opened Rogers Hornsby pulled a tandem. The next item along that line probably will concern Babe Ruth. Here are two of the batting heroes of other days. This year finds them struggling for a place in the baseball sun.

The Rajah led his league for six consecutive years in hitting, from 1920 through 1925, and the lowest figure he batted in those years was .378. But Bambino led the league, only once, 1924, with an average of .378, but his home run feats made him the greatest batting card in the majors.

Not So Many Sluggers

How many men in the majors today have batted .300 or better during their major league years, though he is next in line with .345. Five hitters are within that group—O'Doul of the Dodgers, Hornsby of the Cards, Simmons of the White Sox, Klein of the Reds, and Paul Waner of the Pirates.

O'Doul leads the mob with a batting mark of .349, which seems to make him the best batter in the game.

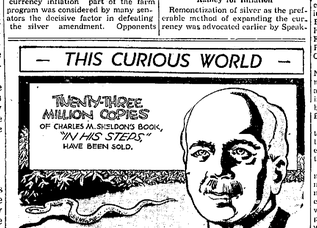
DID YOU KNOW THAT—

Here is some more of that baseball talking . . . the smacked arm, a left-hander . . . dump one, hunt one . . . fancy Dan, a player who pops . . . Dick Smith, a lone wolf, who keeps to himself and never chats . . . fishing trip, swinging at a bad one . . . take a drink, strike out . . . line drive to catcher, stabbing out . . . to manager, curve ball . . . nothing ball, slow one . . . another arm will do . . . catcher hold, stance when batter catches one squarely . . . rubber arm, a pitcher who can work often . . . guesser, an umpire.

though Hornsby is only one point behind with .360. Simmons has a respectable mark of .358, and Klein is a point behind him with .357. Waner hits an even .350 and lets it go at that.

The One Out of Six

There are 20 players in the American League who are hitting .300 hitters. That means that one of every six men who came to the plate is a .300 batsman, figuring 21 players to each team. The ratio is about the same in the National League, which has 32 hitters with averages of .300.



Mary Arnold Host to B. & P. W. Club

Several Guests Entertained by Members of Hope Group

Miss Mary Arnold was hostess to the Hope B. & P. W. Club at her home on North Hervey street Tuesday night. Almost the entire membership was in attendance, and Mrs. Carroll Reynolds of Little Rock, a former member, and Miss Maude Lils, were guests.

During the business session, presided over by the president, Miss Maude Lipscomb, the minutes of the previous meeting were read by Mrs. Frank Hicks, who took the place of Miss Beryl Henry, recording secretary, who was unable to be present.

A letter was read from Julia Chester hospital, thanking the club for the pieces of furniture for a room in their hospital.

Miss Theresa Urban stated that the club would enter a scrap-book in the exhibit at the state convention at Russellville, April 21st and 22nd, and Mrs. W. G. McDonald, Miss Jean Lester and Miss Flora Cotton, will attend its session as delegates from the club.

Miss Lipscomb completed her list of committee chairmen with the following appointments: Education, Miss Jack Porter; Membership, Mrs. H. A. Hamm; Magazine and Research, Miss Edna Jones; Membership, Mrs. Ralph Routon; Public Health, Dr. Etta Ed Champlin.

Miss Flora Cotton, Public Health Nurse in Hempstead county, gave a most interesting report of her work and told of the beneficial work resulting from this program which is a branch of the National Child Welfare Bureau.

The club members made place cards to be used at an educational supper it vbe presided over by Miss Jean Lester, chairman of District Six, during the state convention.

Miss Lester, chairman of the International Relations committee, announced that the first meeting of the new club year would be held at the city hall, April 24, at 7:30 p. m. at which time Dr. Wallace R. Rogers, pastor of the First Baptist church, would discuss "The Significance of the Jewish Persecution." His lecture will be followed by a round table discussion and the public is cordialy invitedt to attend.

The hostess, assisted by her mother, Mrs. John H. Arnold, served delicious refreshments at the conclusion of the program.

The meeting of May 2nd will be in charge of Mrs. Ralph Routon and Miss Beryl Henry.

16-to-1 Silver Is Beaten by Senate

But Vote Is Close, and Inflation Tide Continues to Rise

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Ward from the White House Monday defeated Senate advocates of monetary inflation at a means of aiding the farmer. Their proposal to add remonetization of silver to President Roosevelt's agricultural relief bill was defeated, 43 to 33.

Amid echoes of the turbulent '96 campaign, the Senate resounded all afternoon to demands for free coinage of the white metal at 16 to 1 with gold, sponsored by Senator Wheeler, Democrat, Montana, and urged by most powerful countries" that will participate.

The president's opposition to make currency inflation part of the farm program was considered by many senators the decisive factor in defeating the silver amendment. Opponents were amazed by the strength shown for it and said several who favored Mr. Roosevelt did not want it added to the agriculture bill.

A moment before the vote Senator Robinson of Arkansas informed Senator Borah, Republican, Idaho: "The president does not desire" the amendment. Borah had said he would vote against it if the president disapproved, although the Idahoan had contended farm relief and inflation went hand in hand.

Wheeler, asserting that countries with depreciated currencies were ruining American markets, contended his amendment would double commodity prices in a year and linked with his argument the coming economic conference and an attack upon Great Britain in that connection.

Senator Connally, Democrat, Texas, said he did not think Wheeler was helping the conference's chances for success "by denouncing one of the most powerful countries" that will participate.

Rainey for Inflation

Remonetization of silver as the preferable method of expanding the currency was advocated earlier by Speaker Rainey at a press conference.

"There is strong sentiment throughout the country for some inflation," the Illinois Democrat said. "Sentiment is rapidly crystalizing in the house for it. I personally favor it."

Rainey said he was an "irreconcilable Hoover to 1 man" and preferred expansion through silver. "I think the United States can go ahead on a plan to remonetize silver without an agreement with England and France, but it will be better if we can get concurrency with those countries."

The speaker made it clear that he was giving his personal views. He explained he had not discussed silver with President Roosevelt and was unaware of the administration's attitude.

Anna Katzenes spiritedly remarked:

MacDonald, the Briton who pleaded guilty at the opening of the trial, repeated that plea when his opportunity came to make a statement.

MacDonald, who is lame, limped to the microphone in front of the judges' bench and began in a voice scarcely audible. Standing with his hands in his trousers pockets, he looked Judge Urich squarely in the eye and, in Russian, said:

"I confessed and I have nothing to add."

Cleveland, Disliking

rough-and-tumble battle for control of the Albany & Susquehanna, which the former pair wanted as an adjutet to Erie. Court battles in crooked Tammany courts long indecisive, the principals resorted to actual physical battle over the property. Grouty "Jubilee Jim" Fisk personally led a gang of roughs to size a railway station on the line. Morgan met rough stuff with rough stuff, and there were pitched battles between hired thugs of the two factions up and down the line. Service was disrupted, the public suffered, and the governor had to call out state troops to control the rioting. Years of low suits and injunctions followed. Morgan won in the end.

"Morganization"

By 1884, then, the House of Morgan was not only predominant in the foreign loan field thanks to its London connection, preeminant in the domestic government loan field through succession to the position of the failed Jay Cooke & Co., but was well on the way to "Morganization" of the railroads.

One after the other, railroads which had been exploited, bled, watered, and juggled, came to the House of Morgan for reorganization.

William H. ("The public be damned!") Vanderbilt was the first to yield a major railroad directorship (New York Central) to the House of Morgan in exchange for services in reorganization. West Shore, Philadelphia and Reading, Baltimore and Ohio, Southern, Erie, Bucking Valley, Northern Pacific, Central of Georgia, Chesapeake and Ohio, Atchison, Toplcka and Santa Fe, were all reorganized wholly or in part by Morgan, and each time not only handsome fees for services, but partial or complete control of the road, for at least great influence over them came also to the House.

All these reorganizations were complicated and diverse, but through them all ran the Morgan pattern: An insolvent railroad or industry was financially revamped, new capital introduced, new management provided. It was given the appearance of being unofficial, with other properties which had formerly been competitors. And, by means of voting trusts, acquisition of stock, or interlocking directors, the House of Morgan retained a measure of control. The banker was becoming more than banker.

Morgan Saves the Treasury

The 19th century was coming to its close, and as the new century drew near and dawned, two more incidents set the House of Morgan on a pedestal that became almost a throne.

They were the saving of the U. S. Treasury when it was within one day of being utterly drained of gold, and formation of the first billion-dollar corporation, U. S. Steel.

The treasury incident showed masterful Morgan at his best. At the beginning of 1895 panic conditions were leading to steady withdrawal of gold for shipment abroad. By the end of January, the government's gold reserve had fallen to 40 millions, far below the "safety point." The end of the gold saturday, the crash of government credit seemed inevitable. Congress hacked and filled, hesitated, remained impotent. Silverites blocked every move to put cash in the treasury.

Morgan stepped on a train for Washington, uninvited, risking an open rebuff from President Cleveland, who disliked him. He was met at the station by a message from the White House that Cleveland would not see him. Replied Morgan: "I am going to the Arlington Hotel. I shall wait there until the president is ready to see me."

In his hotel room, Morgan sat, playing solitaire, brooding. Cleveland replied on Congress until the last minute. It did nothing. At breakfast one morning, Morgan received word that the president would see him. Striding across Lafayette Square to the White House, Morgan found the president in conference with anxious government officials. Reports ticked in from New York, revealing the continuing drain of gold. At last a yellow slip was passed to Treasury Secretary Carlisle. It told him that just nine millions of gold remained to the United States. And there was one check outstanding for 12 millions!

"I Will Be Guaranteed"

Then, and only then, did the president turn to Morgan.

Morgan was ready. A solution had come to him over his game of solitaire in the hotel room. He had recalled a Civil War act empowering the government to buy gold coin with its bonds or notes. It opened the way out. Cleveland agreed, with the stipulation that Morgan procure half the gold from abroad, and guarantee that the gold the treasury received for its bonds would not immediately be withdrawn for foreign account and shipped abroad.

Morgan did not hesitate. "Mr. President," he said simply, "I will so guarantee."

The conference broke up. Morgan headed a syndicate which raised $65,000,000 in gold for the government, taking its bonds for $62,000,000 in exchange.

Afterward, questioned by a congressional committee, Morgan was asked why he was unwilling that other firms should receive for the United States this hardly-needed foreign gold.

Morgan answered, again quite simply, "They could not do it."

'Gabriel Over the White House' Here

Walter Huston Opens Thursday in Film of President-Dictator

Undoubtedly the most sensational story ever written about Washington, "Gabriel Over the White House" opens a two-day engagement Thursday at the Saenger will provide a talking picture thrill from its very opening reel to its stirring conclusion.

Walter Huston triumphs with a great performance as President Judd Hammond and in a series of scenes as realistic as newsreels foretells how to give him the powers of a dictator, solves the unemployment problem, halts racketeering and brings foreign debt uncertainty to a close. The story throughout has a ring of authenticity. Brilliantly directed by Gregory La Cava, it will undoubtedly stir up a world of controversy and talk wherever it is shown. Huston has never had a more stirring role and an exceptional supporting cast includes Karen Morley as the mysterious woman in the White House, Franchot Tone, Arthur Byron, Dickie Moore, C. Henry Gordon, David Landau, Samuel Hinds, William Pawley, Jean Parker and Claire Dubrey.

Afterward, questioned by a congressional committee, Morgan was asked why he was unwilling that other firms should receive for the United States this hardly-needed foreign gold.

France Still Seeks Security

By BRUCE CATTON
NEA Editorial Writer

IF the war-weary shade of old Georges Clemenceau stalks within ear-shot of troubled Europe these days, it must be entertaining some curious reflections on the vanity of human endeavors.

At the Versailles peace conference, Clemenceau had but one slogan—Security for France. Everything else was subordinated to this; by sheer force of his personality and skill in negotiation, Clemenceau wove this thesis deeply into the treaty.

Then, when was there, trying vainly to get a peace listed on the points, a peace of justice and clemency, and liberal course, for all that he had just campaigned across Europe on a "Hang the Kaiser!" platform, was ready to help him. But Clemenceau triumphed. France must be rendered forever safe from attack. Whatever happened, the old militaristic clique in Germany was to be made impotent. There would be no more threats from across the Rhine.

Well, Clemenceau had his way. The treaty was his, in its essentials. Germany was left crushed, France rose triumphant.

And today, less than 15 years after that treaty was put together, the menace from beyond the Rhine is on its feet again. The peace of Europe is once more threatened by the old Franco-German quarrel. The old militaristic crowd has been revived. France talks openly of her readiness to fight for what she has gained. Bayonets glisten along half a dozen frontiers.

This, then, is the final fruits of the treaty which, if it did nothing else, was to remove France forever from the danger of war with Germany.

Woodrow Wilson and Cynic Clemenceau met, and the cynic won; and the current of world history today seems to be bent on proving that the cynic was not as good a guide to practical affairs as the idealist would have been.

Seems today, anyway, as though the old adage of men the hard-headed, disillusioned and severely "practical" man can be the least reliable of leaders. The scheme that the visionary Wilson outlined in 1918 was probably very impractical; but would it have resulted in a worse all-around mess than the one which now threatens the peace of the world?

Nevertheless, He Did It

WHEN Franklin D. Roosevelt announced during the campaign that if elected he would cut 25 per cent from the government's operating budget he was greeted by a loud chorus of derision. Long articles were written to prove that the job was simply impossible. His foes laughed at him; his friends uneasily wished that he would think before he spoke.

To date Mr. Roosevelt has been president a little more than a month; and the 25 per cent reduction that he promised has been made, with a little margin to spare.

To make it, of course, he had to tread heavily on some very sensitive toes and beat down influential opposition in his own party. But he didn't seem to mind doing it; and today this countryman are confronted by the novel and agreeable sight of a president who believes that a campaign promise means just exactly what it says.

Revenue From Beer

WHEN the beer bill was being put through Congress, it was estimated that the taxes accruing from the sale of the beverage would bring the federal treasury approximately $150,000,000 a year. It begins to look now as if this estimate were far too low.

To yield that much revenue, the beer industry would have to sell 30,000,000 barrels a year—an average of slightly more than 82,000 barrels a day. During the first 24 hours of legal beer, reliable estimates put the total sales at between 1,000,000 and 1,500,000 barrels.

To be sure, sales will not continue in anything like that volume. But even if they go on only at a tenth of that rate—which is surely a conservative estimate—the tax revenue will be far greater than $150,000,000 a year.

It looks as if the beer tax will be a far more important revenue producer than anyone had dared to hope.

So They Say!

The unpardonable sin is to quit—to give up hope of salvation.—Bishop Warren Lincoln Rogers of Cleveland.

Men thought they had achieved a perfect peace, but instead they found to the contrary.—Pope Pius.

What Legislature Did

X X X
By The Associated Press

Editor's Note:—This is a series of articles explaining acts of the 1933 general assembly.

Act No. 3

Governor Futrell's campaign pledge to oust the old state highway commission and reorganize the highway department was authorized by enactment of Act No. 3 of 1933.

It took effect February 1, and a new commission of five members was immediately appointed.

Pursuant to terms of the act, the commission appointed a state director of highways, whose duties are those of chief executive of the department, and are similar to those therefore exercised by the chairman of the highway commission.

The act also permitted the appointment of a director of highway maintenance.

Acting under terms of Act No. 3, the commission has reduced the number of highway districts from 10 to seven and reorganized them as maintenance districts under a district engineer.

The chairman of the highway commission formerly drew a salary of $5,000 a year, but under the new act, as executive chairman, nor any of the members receive salaries. Their only compensation is $10 a day while attending meetings of the commission. They also receive their expenses to and from meetings.

Rainey Also Speaks

"There is strong sentiment throughout the country for some inflation," the Illinois Democrat said. "Sentiment is rapidly crystalizing in the house for it. I personally favor it."

Rainey said he was an "irreconcilable Hoover to 1 man" and preferred expansion through silver. "I think the United States can go ahead on a plan to remonetize silver without an agreement with England and France, but it will be better if we can get concurrency with those countries."

The speaker made it clear that he was giving his personal views. He explained he had not discussed silver with President Roosevelt and was unaware of the administration's attitude.

Rajah and Ruth

A day or so before the big league season opened Rogers Hornsby pulled a tandem. The next item along that line probably will concern Babe Ruth. Here are two of the batting heroes of other days. This year finds them struggling for a place in the baseball sun.

The Rajah led his league for six consecutive years in hitting, from 1920 through 1925, and the lowest figure he batted in those years was .378. But Bambino led the league, only once, 1924, with an average of .378, but his home run feats made him the greatest batting card in the majors.

Not So Many Sluggers

How many men in the majors today have batted .300 or better during their major league years, though he is next in line with .345. Five hitters are within that group—O'Doul of the Dodgers, Hornsby of the Cards, Simmons of the White Sox, Klein of the Reds, and Paul Waner of the Pirates.

O'Doul leads the mob with a batting mark of .349, which seems to make him the best batter in the game.

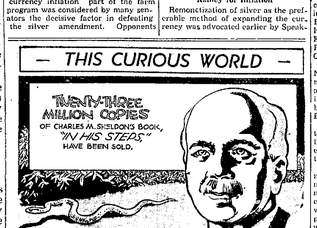
DID YOU KNOW THAT—

Here is some more of that baseball talking . . . the smacked arm, a left-hander . . . dump one, hunt one . . . fancy Dan, a player who pops . . . Dick Smith, a lone wolf, who keeps to himself and never chats . . . fishing trip, swinging at a bad one . . . take a drink, strike out . . . line drive to catcher, stabbing out . . . to manager, curve ball . . . nothing ball, slow one . . . another arm will do . . . catcher hold, stance when batter catches one squarely . . . rubber arm, a pitcher who can work often . . . guesser, an umpire.

though Hornsby is only one point behind with .360. Simmons has a respectable mark of .358, and Klein is a point behind him with .357. Waner hits an even .350 and lets it go at that.

The One Out of Six

There are 20 players in the American League who are hitting .300 hitters. That means that one of every six men who came to the plate is a .300 batsman, figuring 21 players to each team. The ratio is about the same in the National League, which has 32 hitters with averages of .300.



Mary Arnold Host to B. & P. W. Club

Several Guests Entertained by Members of Hope Group

Miss Mary Arnold was hostess to the Hope B. & P. W. Club at her home on North Hervey street Tuesday night. Almost the entire membership was in attendance, and Mrs. Carroll Reynolds of Little Rock, a former member, and Miss Maude Lils, were guests.

During the business session, presided over by the president, Miss Maude Lipscomb, the minutes of the previous meeting were read by Mrs. Frank Hicks, who took the place of Miss Beryl Henry, recording secretary, who was unable to be present.

A letter was read from Julia Chester hospital, thanking the club for the pieces of furniture for a room in their hospital.

Miss Theresa Urban stated that the club would enter a scrap-book in the exhibit at the state convention at Russellville, April 21st and 22nd, and Mrs. W. G. McDonald, Miss Jean Lester and Miss Flora Cotton, will attend its session as delegates from the club.

Miss Lipscomb completed her list of committee chairmen with the following appointments: Education, Miss Jack Porter; Membership, Mrs. H. A. Hamm; Magazine and Research, Miss Edna Jones; Membership, Mrs. Ralph Routon; Public Health, Dr. Etta Ed Champlin.

Miss Flora Cotton, Public Health Nurse in Hempstead county, gave a most interesting report of her work and told of the beneficial work resulting from this program which is a branch of the National Child Welfare Bureau.

The club members made place cards to be used at an educational supper it vbe presided over by Miss Jean Lester, chairman of District Six, during the state convention.

Miss Lester, chairman of the International Relations committee, announced that the first meeting of the new club year would be held at the city hall, April 24, at 7:30 p. m. at which time Dr. Wallace R. Rogers, pastor of the First Baptist church, would discuss "The Significance of the Jewish Persecution." His lecture will be followed by a round table discussion and the public is cordialy invitedt to attend.

The hostess, assisted by her mother, Mrs. John H. Arnold, served delicious refreshments at the conclusion of the program.

The meeting of May 2nd will be in charge of Mrs. Ralph Routon and Miss Beryl Henry.

16-to-1 Silver Is Beaten by Senate

But Vote Is Close, and Inflation Tide Continues to Rise

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Ward from the White House Monday defeated Senate advocates of monetary inflation at a means of aiding the farmer. Their proposal to add remonetization of silver to President Roosevelt's agricultural relief bill was defeated, 43 to 33.

Amid echoes of the turbulent '96 campaign, the Senate resounded all afternoon to demands for free coinage of the white metal at 16 to 1 with gold, sponsored by Senator Wheeler, Democrat, Montana, and urged by most powerful countries" that will participate.

The president's opposition to make currency inflation part of the farm program was considered by many senators the decisive factor in defeating the silver amendment. Opponents were amazed by the strength shown for it and said several who favored Mr. Roosevelt did not want it added to the agriculture bill.

A moment before the vote Senator Robinson of Arkansas informed Senator Borah, Republican, Idaho: "The president does not desire" the amendment. Borah had said he would vote against it if the president disapproved, although the Idahoan had contended farm relief and inflation went hand in hand.

Wheeler, asserting that countries with depreciated currencies were ruining American markets, contended his amendment would double commodity prices in a year and linked with his argument the coming economic conference and an attack upon Great Britain in that connection.

Senator Connally, Democrat, Texas, said he did not think Wheeler was helping the conference's chances for success "by denouncing one of the most powerful countries" that will participate.

Rainey for Inflation

Remonetization of silver as the preferable method of expanding the currency was advocated earlier by Speaker Rainey at a press conference.

"There is strong sentiment throughout the country for some inflation," the Illinois Democrat said. "Sentiment is rapidly crystalizing in the house for it. I personally favor it."

Rainey said he was an "irreconcilable Hoover to 1 man" and preferred expansion through silver. "I think the United States can go ahead on a plan to remonetize silver without an agreement with England and France, but it will be better if we can get concurrency with those countries."

The speaker made it clear that he was giving his personal views. He explained he had not discussed silver with President Roosevelt and was unaware of the administration's attitude.

Anna Katzenes spiritedly remarked:

MacDonald, the Briton who pleaded guilty at the opening of the trial, repeated that plea when his opportunity came to make a statement.

MacDonald, who is lame, limped to the microphone in front of the judges' bench and began in a voice scarcely audible. Standing with his hands in his trousers pockets, he looked Judge Urich squarely in the eye and, in Russian, said:

"I confessed and I have nothing to add."

rough-and-tumble battle for control of the Albany & Susquehanna, which the former pair wanted as an adjutet to Erie. Court battles in crooked Tammany courts long indecisive, the principals resorted to actual physical battle over the property. Grouty "Jubilee Jim" Fisk personally led a gang of roughs to size a railway station on the line. Morgan met rough stuff with rough stuff, and there were pitched battles between hired thugs of the two factions up and down the line. Service was disrupted, the public suffered, and the governor had to call out state troops to control the rioting. Years of low suits and injunctions followed. Morgan won in the end.

"Morganization"

By 1884, then, the House of Morgan was not only predominant in the foreign loan field thanks to its London connection, preeminant in the domestic government loan field through succession to the position of the failed Jay Cooke & Co., but was well on the way to "Morganization" of the railroads.

One after the other, railroads which had been exploited, bled, watered, and juggled, came to the House of Morgan for reorganization.

William H. ("The public be damned!") Vanderbilt was the first to yield a major railroad directorship (New York Central) to the House of Morgan in exchange for services in reorganization. West Shore, Philadelphia and Reading, Baltimore and Ohio, Southern, Erie, Bucking Valley, Northern Pacific, Central of Georgia, Chesapeake and Ohio, Atchison, Toplcka and Santa Fe, were all reorganized wholly or in part by Morgan, and each time not only handsome fees for services, but partial or complete control of the road, for at least great influence over them came also to the House.

All these reorganizations were complicated and diverse, but through them all ran the Morgan pattern: An insolvent railroad or industry was financially revamped, new capital introduced, new management provided. It was given the appearance of being unofficial, with other properties which had formerly been competitors. And, by means of voting trusts, acquisition of stock, or interlocking directors, the House of Morgan retained a measure of control. The banker was becoming more than banker.

Morgan Saves the Treasury

The 19th century was coming to its close, and as the new century drew near and dawned, two more incidents set the House of Morgan on a pedestal that became almost a throne.

They were the saving of the U. S. Treasury when it was within one day of being utterly drained of gold, and formation of the first billion-dollar corporation, U. S. Steel.

The treasury incident showed masterful Morgan at his best. At the beginning of 1895 panic conditions were leading to steady withdrawal of gold for shipment abroad. By the end of January, the government's gold reserve had fallen to 40 millions, far below the "safety point." The end of the gold saturday, the crash of government credit seemed inevitable. Congress hacked and filled, hesitated, remained impotent. Silverites blocked every move to put cash in the treasury.

Morgan stepped on a train for Washington, uninvited, risking an open rebuff from President Cleveland, who disliked him. He was met at the station by a message from the White House that Cleveland would not see him. Replied Morgan: "I am going to the Arlington Hotel. I shall wait there until the president is ready to see me."

In his hotel room, Morgan sat, playing solitaire, brooding. Cleveland replied on Congress until the last minute. It did nothing. At breakfast one morning, Morgan received word that the president would see him. Striding across Lafayette Square to the White House, Morgan found the president in conference with anxious government officials. Reports ticked in from New York, revealing the continuing drain of gold. At last a yellow slip was passed to Treasury Secretary Carlisle. It told him that just nine millions of gold remained to the United States. And there was one check outstanding for 12 millions!

"I Will Be Guaranteed"

Then, and only then, did the president turn to Morgan.

Morgan was ready. A solution had come to him over his game of solitaire in the hotel room. He had recalled a Civil War act empowering the government to buy gold coin with its bonds or notes. It opened the way out. Cleveland agreed, with the stipulation that Morgan procure half the gold from abroad, and guarantee that the gold the treasury received for its bonds would not immediately be withdrawn for foreign account and shipped abroad.

Morgan did not hesitate. "Mr. President," he said simply, "I will so guarantee."

The conference broke up. Morgan headed a syndicate which raised $65,000,000 in gold for the government, taking its bonds for $62,000,000 in exchange.

Afterward, questioned by a congressional committee, Morgan was asked why he was unwilling that other firms should receive for the United States this hardly-needed foreign gold.

Morgan answered, again quite simply, "They could not do it."

NEXT: Midwife to U. S. Steel, the House climbs to a pinnacle as banker to a dozen nations.

'Gabriel Over the White House' Here

Walter Huston Opens Thursday in Film of President-Dictator

Undoubtedly the most sensational story ever written about Washington, "Gabriel Over the White House" opens a two-day engagement Thursday at the Saenger will provide a talking picture thrill from its very opening reel to its stirring conclusion.

Walter Huston triumphs with a great performance as President Judd Hammond and in a series of scenes as realistic as newsreels foretells how to give him the powers of a dictator, solves the unemployment problem, halts racketeering and brings foreign debt uncertainty to a close. The story throughout has a ring of authenticity. Brilliantly directed by Gregory La Cava, it will undoubtedly stir up a world of controversy and talk wherever it is shown. Huston has never had a more stirring role and an exceptional supporting cast includes Karen Morley as the mysterious woman in the White House, Franchot Tone, Arthur Byron, Dickie Moore, C. Henry Gordon, David Landau, Samuel Hinds, William Pawley, Jean Parker and Claire Dubrey.

Afterward, questioned by a congressional committee, Morgan was asked why he was unwilling that other firms should receive for the United States this hardly-needed foreign gold.

Dan moved his chair closer, touched her arm. "Monnie," he began in a low, intimate tone, "say you haven't—"

WHO'S HERE TODAY

DARLE, petite, 26, [illegible] in love with DAN [illegible], heir to one of Bellaire's richest families. Monnie works in [illegible] helping to support [illegible] younger sister, [illegible] Kay, and [illegible] brother, BILLY, in a [illegible] apartment. The quintet has [illegible] friends. Dan Cardigan [illegible] back from the city and does [illegible] sit at once, the [illegible] happy. CHARLES EUSTACE, [illegible] and handsome [illegible] to town, engages Kay's [illegible] then arrives unexpectedly [illegible] Monnie is washing the [illegible] dishes.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER II

She stared down at her, long-lashed, sullen-looking, eyes [illegible] from within. "Hello!" she said hollily.

Darle shrank back. The greeting was casual, as though he had been gone a day or a week instead of almost a year. Her knees [illegible]. She took her cue from him, shrugging herself out of the pressing fingers.

"Nice to see you," she said coolly, trying to deny the sick [illegible] his arrival had stirred within her. "When did you get back?"

Dan's ease shifted. He [illegible] to the little bay window which looked out on the lawn. Her geraniums bloomed there in old-fashioned wire stand. Dan [illegible] one of this and [illegible]. "Oh, around noon. I [illegible] with the family until now. Thought I'd drop in [illegible] see how you've been behaving, since I left."

"It's trying to me," said Monnie's traitorous heart.

Aloud she said casually: "Oh, [illegible] your. Kay said at dinner [illegible] she'd seen you."

He swung around. His answer had the swiftness of a pistol shot. "She did, eh? I don't see how she could have. I've been busy as a third dog ever since I arrived."

Monnie did not look at him. The old struggle had begun again between them. Dan's constant [illegible] maddened her, whose nature was simple and honest as the day.

Darle O'Dare stirred. Her [illegible] fell to the floor with a [illegible] and she called, "Who's [illegible] you're talking to, Monnie? Did Billy get in yet?"

The girl was grateful for the interruption. An awkward silence like a barrier had grown up between her and the tall young man in the gray suit.

"It's Dan Cardigan, Mother," she said casually. "He knocked but we didn't hear, so he came around."

Mrs. O'Dare greeted Dan.

"Come out of the kitchen, children. I was just thinking of lighting a fire in here. It will be cheery."

Monnie interrupted, her usually sweet voice high and strained.

"Dan just stopped in to say hello. He's running along."

THE look Dan bestowed upon her was baffling in its hidden quality. He said easily, "Not unless your mother sends me. Or wouldn't you like to go for a ride? Just out to Mill Creek Road and back—"

Unaccountably, the girl's heart tightened. What did it matter, after all, whether Dan fibbed to her about the time of his arrival? He was here, just as she had dreamed. That was all that counted.

"I'll dash upstairs a minute and fix my hair," she murmured confidingly. And vanished.

As she raised the outline of her mouth with a little raspberry colored stick and powdered her nose Monnie could hear the rumble of Dan's voice, talking to her mother. Her despair of half an hour ago had lifted. She felt cheered. Anything might happen. Anything could. Was she a fool to stake so much on her hopes of Dan?

"Don't be late, dear," her mother warned.

Now he was helping her into the low-slung car. The door slammed. The motor purred.

"Cold?" Dan was looking down at her as they flew along. She shook her head and laughed.

"Of course not. It's a beautiful night. Just like summer." She felt happy now as she always did when she was alone with Dan.

They talked a little—desultory talk. Dan drove fast. In the flashing lights before they reached the edge of town Monica could see his handsome profile.

"I thought we'd drop in at the Cabin for a bit and dance," Dan announced casually. Monica felt a momentary flash of disappointment. Of course it would be lovely to dance with Dan. Just to be seen with him was a matter for pride. But it was grand, too, being alone together. However, she said lightly, "That would be fun."

She stifled her conscience. Mother didn't like her to go out to the Cabin, a harmless enough appearing road place some 10 miles out from town. Of late rather unpleasant reports had drifted back to Belvedere about it.

THE red stucco roof of the Cabin came into view presently and the muffled beat of jazz.

"Don't know why they call this place 'the Cabin,'" muttered Dan jovially. "It looks for all the world like a near-Spanish bungalow."

He helped her out of the car and she smoothed her frock, glancing down at it doubtfully and wishing she had changed to her blue crepe. Oh, well, it didn't matter!

There were a few couples solemnly gyrating on the dance floor. Monica ensured herself, after a swift survey, that no one she knew was present and was consequently relieved

The man who owned the place, a tiddic-set, cheerful looking Italian, led them to a table by a window, supplied them with menu cards and left them. Dan turned to her and Monnie's heart missed a beat. For the first time she saw the old Dan in that glance—the humbly worshiping Dan who had first said to her summer before last, "I'm falling in love with you, girl. d'ye know that?"

He only said in rather commonplace fashion, "Missed you. Like the very devil."

She strove for the light touch. It would never do to let him know how much she had missed him. Never, never!

Gallantly she said, "I've thought of you a lot, too."

Dan set his jaw in an ominous way he had. He demanded, "Is that all you've got to say about it?"

Monica could have laughed aloud, could have sung for pure joy at his fierceness.

"All?" she asked demurely. "That's a lot. This is a small place, you know, and I miss my —my friends."

SHE gave him an impish smile. Dan glowered at her, his blue eyes fairly crackling at her under his long lashes.

"What have you been doing with yourself all winter? I suppose you've got a trail of young men from here to High Falls."

This wasn't quite the note Monnie had expected him to strike. It was all very well for Dan to think she had a string of beaux but she didn't like to see him so hospitable to the idea.

So she said lightly, "Well, Sam's been around a lot, you know. He's nice and I like him. And that new man's in town, you know." Her tongue ran on. She couldn't help it.

"What new man?" Dan demanded.

Monnie felt panic. Who was it Kay had spoken of at supper that very evening? Oh, yes, Charles Eustace.

"There's Charles Eustace," Monnie told Dan glibly. "He's from New York. He's living at the old Waterman place."

She didn't say, actually, that she knew him. But she gave that impression.

"Oh, that chap!" Dan used a disdainful tone but Monnie knew he was annoyed and rejoiced in the knowledge.

Their waiter, arriving with a laden tray, interrupted the discussion.

"I didn't know you liked that type of chap," Dan observed a few moments later over his club sandwich. He moved his chair closer to hers, touched her arm.

"Monnie, say you haven't"—he began in a low, intimate tone, quite different from any he had used that evening. The girl turned to him, her heart in her eyes.

"Hello, there!" cried a gay voice. "Don't let us barge into the party. We're just stopping to say howdy."

With resentment in her heart, Monnie looked up into the piquant face of Sandra Lawrence. Sandra was charmingly and fashionably dressed in an exquisite costume of pale green silk. Dan sprang to his feet. In an instants flash of perception Monnie saw that the encounter was not entirely unexpected.

Behind Sandra stood a tall, dark stranger. Dan interposed, "You know Mr. Eustace, Monica?"

Charles Eustace looked from one to another and bowed without speaking.

Cities Service Co. Earns 61 Million

Net Declines From 63 Millions for Preceding Year's Operations

NEW YORK.—(AP)—The annual report of Cities Service company says that consolidated net earnings in 1932 before depletion and depreciation amounted to $60,951,583 compared with $63,198,882 in 1931.

Reserve appropriations deducted from current income for the year amounted to $18,397,649. Charges against reserves for the same period were $6,401,906.

Henry L. Doherty, president, said that at the beginning of 1932 the total amount of notes payable and funded debt maturing within 12 months was more than $110,000,000. At the end of 1932 the total of such items was $61,000,000, and since December 31, 1932, $48,000,000 of the latter have been replaced by notes payable due after January 1, 1934.

On December 31 consolidated current assets were listed at $87,449,014 including $28,360,371 in cash. Current liabilities, including $58,559,973 notes payable, amounted to $33,001,522. At the close of 1931 the company had current assets of $113,349,305 including cash of $41,817,256, and current liabilities of $66,014,301.

France Is Offering to Pay Lump Sum

Herriot Sails for U. S., Hopeful of Striking Debt Bargain

LE HAVRE, France.—(AP)—Former Premier Edouard Herriot, France's special representative for President Roosevelt's economic discussions in Washington, sailed Monday with the hope that he might succeed in clearing the way for a French offer to wipe out the war debt with a lump sum payment.

Although M. Herriot has been instructed to play the part of an observer, rather than a negotiator, he will seek to prepare for later debt negotiations through Andre de Laboulaye, new French ambassador at Washington. The French debt to the United States is $3,921,547,000, with $19,301,000 in default.

A Foreign Office spokesman explained the status of the former premier in the Washington discussions thus:

"Premier Daladier had two alternatives: First, to send M. Herriot to Washington with last December's debt installment in a satchel, which he could not do because of the opposition in the Chamber of Deputies, and second, to send him as an unofficial observer of the type Americus has been sending abroad since the war. The second alternative was chosen."

Prince Seen on German Throne

spring, don't dip too heavily into the paint pot when you rouge.

The new high tints are hard to wear. Don't get your rouge on wrong or too heavily, thus making your hats harder to wear.

If you have a round face, broad through the cheeks, then rouge about half-way between your nose and your ears, in a manner that spreads the rouge gently up and down, rather than widening it across your cheeks. This tends to elongate your facial contour.

However, if you have too long and thin a face to begin with, and your high hat makes it look even longer and thinner, then spread your rouge wide at the sides of your cheeks. And this gives the illusion of more width.

If your skin is dry, be sure to use a cream powder base. Or moisten your skin before applying rouge. You'd be surprised how efficacious plain cold water is in this respect. Just splash your face with water, don't dry it off and put on your rouge. Of course the water dries, so it isn't as permanent a help as cream powder base, but it does help you get rouge on so that it looks natural.

Remember that looking natural is an asset this year. It's a season for ladylooks. Too-red cheeks are not right, they are too artificial. Let your eyes and lips speak for you and your cheeks stay demurely natural looking.

"What have you been doing with yourself all winter? I suppose you've got a trail of young men from here to High Falls."

This wasn't quite the note Monnie had expected him to strike. It was all very well for Dan to think she had a string of beaux but she didn't like to see him so hospitable to the idea.

So she said lightly, "Well, Sam's been around a lot, you know. He's nice and I like him. And that new man's in town, you know." Her tongue ran on. She couldn't help it.

"What new man?" Dan demanded.

Monnie felt panic. Who was it Kay had spoken of at supper that very evening? Oh, yes, Charles Eustace.

"There's Charles Eustace," Monnie told Dan glibly. "He's from New York. He's living at the old Waterman place."

She didn't say, actually, that she knew him. But she gave that impression.

"Oh, that chap!" Dan used a disdainful tone but Monnie knew he was annoyed and rejoiced in the knowledge.

Their waiter, arriving with a laden tray, interrupted the discussion.

"I didn't know you liked that type of chap," Dan observed a few moments later over his club sandwich. He moved his chair closer to hers, touched her arm.

"Monnie, say you haven't"—he began in a low, intimate tone, quite different from any he had used that evening. The girl turned to him, her heart in her eyes.

"Hello, there!" cried a gay voice. "Don't let us barge into the party. We're just stopping to say howdy."

With resentment in her heart, Monnie looked up into the piquant face of Sandra Lawrence. Sandra was charmingly and fashionably dressed in an exquisite costume of pale green silk. Dan sprang to his feet. In an instants flash of perception Monnie saw that the encounter was not entirely unexpected.

Behind Sandra stood a tall, dark stranger. Dan interposed, "You know Mr. Eustace, Monica?"

Charles Eustace looked from one to another and bowed without speaking.

Cities Service Co. Earns 61 Million

Net Declines From 63 Millions for Preceding Year's Operations

NEW YORK.—(AP)—The annual report of Cities Service company says that consolidated net earnings in 1932 before depletion and depreciation amounted to $60,951,583 compared with $63,198,882 in 1931.

Reserve appropriations deducted from current income for the year amounted to $18,397,649. Charges against reserves for the same period were $6,401,906.

Henry L. Doherty, president, said that at the beginning of 1932 the total amount of notes payable and funded debt maturing within 12 months was more than $110,000,000. At the end of 1932 the total of such items was $61,000,000, and since December 31, 1932, $48,000,000 of the latter have been replaced by notes payable due after January 1, 1934.

On December 31 consolidated current assets were listed at $87,449,014 including $28,360,371 in cash. Current liabilities, including $58,559,973 notes payable, amounted to $33,001,522. At the close of 1931 the company had current assets of $113,349,305 including cash of $41,817,256, and current liabilities of $66,014,301.

France Is Offering to Pay Lump Sum

Herriot Sails for U. S., Hopeful of Striking Debt Bargain

LE HAVRE, France.—(AP)—Former Premier Edouard Herriot, France's special representative for President Roosevelt's economic discussions in Washington, sailed Monday with the hope that he might succeed in clearing the way for a French offer to wipe out the war debt with a lump sum payment.

Although M. Herriot has been instructed to play the part of an observer, rather than a negotiator, he will seek to prepare for later debt negotiations through Andre de Laboulaye, new French ambassador at Washington. The French debt to the United States is $3,921,547,000, with $19,301,000 in default.

A Foreign Office spokesman explained the status of the former premier in the Washington discussions thus:

"Premier Daladier had two alternatives: First, to send M. Herriot to Washington with last December's debt installment in a satchel, which he could not do because of the opposition in the Chamber of Deputies, and second, to send him as an unofficial observer of the type Americus has been sending abroad since the war. The second alternative was chosen."

Janet Has Decree—and Freckles

She didn't wear makeup when she played in her own drama, so her movie fans now may know that Janet Gaynor has some very fine freckles. This picture of the fine star was made as she appeared in court when she was granted a divorce from Lydell Peck.

Judge Fights Senate Impeachment

Prince Seen on German Throne

Europe is regarding Prince Philip of Hesse, above, as a favored candidate for the former Kaiser's throne in Germany. The Prince is a nephew of the ex-Kaiser and is the husband of Princess Mafalda of Italy. Speculation was heightened by the Prince's visit to Italy with Hitlerite officials.

spring, don't dip too heavily into the paint pot when you rouge.

The new high tints are hard to wear. Don't get your rouge on wrong or too heavily, thus making your hats harder to wear.

If you have a round face, broad through the cheeks, then rouge about half-way between your nose and your ears, in a manner that spreads the rouge gently up and down, rather than widening it across your cheeks. This tends to elongate your facial contour.

However, if you have too long and thin a face to begin with, and your high hat makes it look even longer and thinner, then spread your rouge wide at the sides of your cheeks. And this gives the illusion of more width.

If your skin is dry, be sure to use a cream powder base. Or moisten your skin before applying rouge. You'd be surprised how efficacious plain cold water is in this respect. Just splash your face with water, don't dry it off and put on your rouge. Of course the water dries, so it isn't as permanent a help as cream powder base, but it does help you get rouge on so that it looks natural.

Remember that looking natural is an asset this year. It's a season for ladylooks. Too-red cheeks are not right, they are too artificial. Let your eyes and lips speak for you and your cheeks stay demurely natural looking.

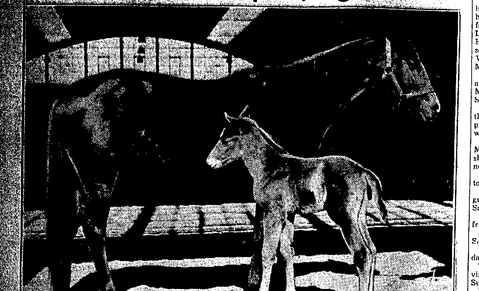
Do Horses Sleep Lying Down?



BY BILL BRAUCHER
NEA Service Sports Editor

NEW YORK—Do horses sleep lying down? How much do they eat? How are they taught to race? How old is a horse when he is put to work? What is meant when it is said a horse "runs cunning?"

Horsemen know the answers to all these questions, of course, but not every patron of the tracks does. The following notes, gathered at odd times from conversations with various trainers, visit on the Jimmy Rowe, Sr., Sunny Jim Fitzsimmons, Henry McDaniel and others may shed some light on the matter. To prevent. . . .

Most horses sleep standing up . . . but Man o' War, one of the greatest runners that ever lived, always has slept lying down, on trains or in stables. . . Man o' War has other peculiarities . . . he occasionally eats on his haunches like a dog . . . and yawns like a man. . . Trainers say there never was another thoroughbred that yawned. . . .

Race horses usually are hearty feeders . . . burning up lots of energy on the tracks. . . . Man o' War, now in retirement at Faraway Farm, near Lexington, always is hungry. . . His consumption of oats when racing was about 13 quarts a day and all the hay they would give him. . . . Man o' War used to eat so rapidly they had to put a bit in his mouth at mealtime to slow him up and prevent indigestion.

Race-horses frequent are ill. . . .

Before the international match race of 1923 between Zev and the invader, Papyrus, Zev came down with a sore throat. . . . He coughed a lot and couldn't sleep well. . . . Then, just as he was beginning to get well, he broke out with hives. . . . Finally Sam Hildreth got him into condition . . . and did the best Papyrus!

Most foals come into the world in April or May . . . and all become yearlings on New Year's day. . . . Then, During the suckling period the foal follows his mother closely. . . . He doesn't look much like a horse . . . with his spindly legs, big neck and knobby joints.

He eats a mash made of oats, bran and barley when he celebrates his first birthday . . . then he is put into a stall of his own . . . and one day a man comes in with a saddle. . . . The baby is alarmed usually and leaps around. . . . The saddle comes off promptly . . . but it is put back again, day after day . . . then the girth strap is buckled and quickly unbuckled. . . . This performance is repeated, the strap drawn a little tighter each time.

After a week or two of the saddle treatment, the same course is applied with the bridle. . . . After a week of this the colt is led around wearing saddle and bridle . . . then the boy climbs into the saddle for only a few seconds. . . . The next day he sits a little longer. . . . This is kept up until the colt gets used to it. . . . Then stopping and starting are taught, in the same gradual manner. . . . The treatments last about four months.

At first he is allowed to gallop as he prefers. . . . By November he is ready to gallop three miles a day.

Soon after he is turned out into the paddock for the winter. . . . When spring of his second year comes, he is ready for the races.

The utmost kindness is demanded of handlers and table boys. . . . Patience and gentleness is the only cure for fractious horses. . . . When it came to breaking Man o' War he fought like a lion . . . and screamed with rage. . . . A little wrong treatment might have spoiled him . . . but Man o' War was handled like a baby . . . and his tantrums lasted only a few days.

To this day, when taken out for his exercise gallops, "Red," as they call him, snorts and cuts a few capers in excitement. . . . That is the race horse in him.

Horsemen say a thoroughbred's manners reflect the treatment he receives. . . . Abuse breeds savagery. . . . Under ill treatment horses "turn cunning" . . . and there seldom is a cure for a cunning horse. . . . A strain of cunning may be dormant through two or three generations of a line, and crop out in the next. . . . Sarazen was a great horse, but incurably cunning.

The attachment between negroes and horses is turf tradition. . . . There is a sentimental bond between them. . . . Great jockeys in other years were colored . . . and there is no branch of horsemanship in which negroes have not scored great accomplishments. . . .

At most breeding farms and training establishments rigid rules forbid attendants even to raise their voices to a horse.

The disappearance of the "killer" horse is due to more intelligent treatment. . . . Yearlings no longer are beaten with chains, a cruel custom sometimes practiced in early days. . . . Horsemen have come to a realization that only gentleness pays dividends with blooded animals.

Of course there still are exceptions. . . . That is why starters sometimes have so much trouble with certain horses at the barrier.

Jim Fitzsimmons, trainer of Gallant Fox, said, "If a horse can't run, a whip won't make him." That may be one of the reasons why horses trained by Fitz last year won more than $1 races, and upwards of $300,000 in purses.

Here and There

Editorial By Alex. H. Washburn

FOR unequalled heroism read today's dispatch about Engineer Charles Ledbetter, of the Missouri Pacific. He stayed in a flaming locomotive-cab and stopped the "Texan" express, saving its passengers.

Two men on an engine. One jumps—the other sticks until duty is done.

What is bravery? Is it a conscious action, or merely instinct, stronger in some men than others?

The world doesn't really know. A great writer pondered over the question and wrote a book. The writer was Joseph Conrad. His book is "Lord Jim."

It's the story of a man who failed in a moment of great danger, who went about the world the rest of his life looking for his second chance—and found it.

And this is Conrad's point: The same man who quit a sinking ship on the instinct to save his life, years later deliberately walked into the courtroom of a native Indian king where he knew death awaited him.

Bravery is several things.

Newspapers and magazines are full of articles about the House of Morgan this week. The Star is publishing Willis Thornton's series, written for NEA Service. Thomas W. Lamont's biography of the late Harry Davison, once a member of the firm, is running serially in Collier's magazine. But I think the best of the lot is an article about the elder J. P. Morgan, written by his chauffeur, in this week's Saturday Evening Post. The chauffeur, Alfred Blum, recalls how he once heard "J. P." shouting a hymn in an Episcopal church. You really ought to read it.

Today's "Morgan" installment in the Star gives you something to think about. Much of the Missouri Pacific's 20-million-dollar loan from the R. F. C., it is believed, eventually found its way back to the House of Morgan, repaying some of their loans to the railroad.

This makes all of us mad.

It is, however, poetic justice. Whenever a nation's people start reaching into the public treasury, and all are agreed that reaching into the public treasury is the thing to do, then the man gets most who has the longest reach—and a man like Morgan who has reached the furthest in private business will be the one to reach in for public funds.

Here's a grim warning to get this country back to the respectability of every man standing on his own feet as soon as conditions permit.

There is a curious thing about the coming race for supreme court justice which I don't understand.

One of the three candidates is former Justice Carroll D. Wood. He is running against C. E. Johnson, present chief justice by appointment; and W. H. Arnold, Sr. Mr. Wood is a candidate because, after serving after 20 years service on the bench, he was denied his retirement pay by the last session of the legislature.

I have never been able to understand that. Politics or personality nor politics nor law can have very much to do with the question of pensioning judges after 20 years has sat on the state supreme bench.

The very cornerstone of American justice requires that men who give their lives to the judiciary shall be taken care of by the state when their active service is over.

I wish some one would explain this legislative failure in the case of Judge Wood.

State Committee Can't Name Party Choice for Court

Must Call Primary or Convention Ahead of July 18th Election

3 CANDIDATES FILE

Wood, Who Lost Retirement Pay, Opposes Johnson and Arnold

LITTLE ROCK — (AP) — Stripped of its power to name the party nominee for a vacancy in a special election through a change in rules adopted by the last state convention, the Democratic state central committee must either call a special primary or a state convention to select the candidate for chief justice of the state supreme court in the election July 18.

Governor Futrell has announced he will call a special election for chief justice for the unexpired term of the late Judge Jess S. Hart, on the same date as Arkansas vote on the question of repeal of the Eighteenth (prohibition) amendment.

The state central committee will meet in May to decide how the party nominee 'S to be chosen.

It has been the custom for the committee itself to nominate the candidate where special elections have been called to fill vacancies.

The last state convention, however, changed this, adopting a rule that the committee must call a special primary if there is sufficient time before the general election. There will be ample time for such a primary.

The convention plan of selecting party nominees has not been used by the democrats in Arkansas in many years. Few special primaries have been called in recent years.

The state committee has nominated candidates to fill vacancies in congress and also in the United States senate.

Mrs. Hattie W. Caraway succeeded her husband in the senate through appointment by Governor Parnell, and is a candidate for the remainder of Judge Hart's unexpired term.

Carroll D. Wood, retired justice of the supreme court, also has announced he will be a candidate. Wood has W. H. Arnold, Sr., of Texarkana.

Judge Wood, who served 20 years on the supreme bench, entered this race as a result of the failure of the 1933 legislature to make provision for continuing his retirement pay.

FIREMAN IS KILLED

Jumps Down 100-Foot Bank—Fire Spreads to Coaches

POPLAR BLUFF, Mo.—(AP)—Sticking to his throttle in the face of blazing gasoline flames, Engineer Charles Ledbetter, of Little Rock, brought the "Texas," Missouri Pacific crack train, to a stop

Engineer for 32 Years

LITTLE ROCK —(AP)— Charles Ledbetter, hero of the near-wreck of the Texan express, is one of the Missouri Pacific's veteran engineers, having been piloting an engine for 32 years.

Fireman E. E. Hurt had been with the railroad 26 years. He is survived by his widow and three daughters.

Thursday, and then fell unconscious from his seat, critically burned.

The passengers were unharmed.

The locomotive of the express train struck an oil truck near Mark, Mo., at 7 o'clock Thursday morning, killing driver and throwing gasoline over the speeding locomotive.

Fireman Jumps, Dies.

Fireman E. E. Hurt, of Little Rock, was killed when he leaped from the flame-filled cab down a 100-foot embankment.

The engineer brought the train to a stop about three-quarters of a mile from the crash, and then lost consciousness.

The train was traveling swiftly to make up lost time when it hit the truck, driven by Kip Nelson, of Corning, Ark., at a crossing.

A relief train was sent to Moark to bring in Engineer Ledbetter, the dead fireman, and the stalled train.

Planes Reach Cuzzens

The flames spread to five of the passenger cars of the Texan, and hysterical passengers jumped from the window, escaping uninjured.

The Texan was bound for St. Louis.

The Texan, fastest train on the Missouri Pacific system, and one of the fastest long-distance expresses in America, passes through Hope northbound about midnight daily. It formerly passed this city at 8:40 p. m., but last winter the time was changed. The "Sunshine" express swapping schedules with the "Texan."

Italy Would Pay Debts With Goods

Mussolini Works for Better Political Feeling Throughout Europe

ROME, Italy.—(AP)—An agreement in Italian and German viewpoints that improvement in the world political atmosphere is a necessary forerunner for economic betterment, was disclosed in speeches Wednesday by Premier Mussolini and Hermann Goering, German cabinet minister without portfolio. Appearing at a meeting of Inter-Parliamentary Commerce, Conference on the eve of the Washington economic conversations, both statesmen stressed this point.

The Italian premier left no doubt that war debts were uppermost in his mind in connection with the economic discussions. He declared the conviction was growing everywhere that war debts installments should be paydsi primarily in exchange of goods and services.

Italy is opposed to quotas on imports and restrictions on foreign exchange which "raise a heap of obstacles to commercial movement, contracting its volume notably and creating a harmful disequilibrium between internal and external prices," he said.

"A good sign is the recognition that is being reinforced everywhere that it is not possible to pay international debts merely with transfers of money, or that the debts themselves must be paid above all with exchanges of goods or services."

Japanese Aim to Seize North China

Their Planes Drop Leaflets Appealing for "Re-established Order"

TIENTSIN, China — (AP) — Tientsin was decidedly uneasy Wednesday night as the result of the newest Japanese-Manchukuan activities in the Lwan river sector south of the Great Wall and reports of numerous casualties among Chinese civilians.

A widespread belief that Japanese and their Manchukuan allies in order to continue their advance toward the Tientsin-Pukow railway launched the dropping of leaflets by Japanese airmen in a wide area south of the Great Wall and beyond the limits of North China.

Manchukuoan troops, as they advanced in the new battle zone northwest of here, also were said to be circulating leaflets which read:

"We are the anti-Chiang Kai-Shek army, come to re-establish order in North China."

(Marshal Chiang Kai-Shek is the military dictator of the Chinese national government).

Morgan Endorses "F. D."

NEW YORK—(AP)—J. P. Morgan Wednesday endorsed President Roosevelt's action in suspending gold exports.

"I welcome the reported action of the president and the secretary of the Treasury in placing an embargo on gold exports," he said. "It has been apparent that the effort to maintain the exchange value of the dollar at a premium as against depreciated foreign currencies was having a deflationary effect upon already severely deflated American prices and wages and employment.

"It seems to me clear that the only cure for the depression is to combat and overcome the deflationary forces. Therefore, I regard the action now taken as being the best possible course under existing circumstances."

It was the first public statement issued by the traditionally reticent head of the House of Morgan since his statement in London in September, 1931, when he described the British suspension of gold payments at that time as constructive, under the circumstances. The statement produced a profound impression in banking quarters generally.

Firemen's Pension Fund Gets $600.70

It Is Hope's Share of 2 % Tax on Fire Insurance Premiums

The Hope Firemen's Relief and Pension fund will receive $600.70 as its share of the state apportionment derived from a tax of 2 per cent on premiums of all fire, tornado and casualty insurance companies doing business in the state during 1932.

Hope's share of the total of $33,611.65 sent out by State Auditor J. Oscar Humphreys to municipal treasurers in 72 Arkansas cities and incorporated towns participating in the distribution had not arrived Thursday, but was expected at any time.

One half of the total tax of $77,223.33 goes to the firemen's fund in cities which have duly organized and active fire departments, and one-half is credited to the state general revenue fund.

According to the Statement prepared in the state insurance department at Little Rock which collects the tax, the 2 per cent was paid on $3,861,166.28 premiums of companies operating in Arkansas.

COTTON GAINS $1.15

NEW YORK—(AP)—Stocks and commodities rushed higher again Thursday in the belief that the United States government temporarily dropped the gold standard brought with it huge gains in the American dollar against foreign currencies.

Stocks charged up $1 to $9 a share in tumultuous trading and transactions

Dollar Down, Pound Up

By the Associated Press

Restoration by President Roosevelt of the embargo on gold exports from the United States Wednesday accelerated the downward movement of the dollar abroad.

In London the dollar dropped from Tuesday's close of $3.47½ to the pound to $3.55 before news of the government's action reached the London exchanges. There was a fall from $3.65 to $3.64.

An official close in Paris of 26.48 francs was the lowest since November, 1925. In later unofficial trading the dollar declined to 26.40 francs.

Rome banks offered 19.80 lire to the dollar at the close of business against a close of 19.22. Switzerland's franc fell to 5.14 against 5.11 for Wednesday's close.

Foreign currencies were generally quoted at more than 30 cents on the dollar Tuesday's prices.

Wheat's extreme advances of 5 cents a bushel were cut materially by profit taking, but closed with a net gain of about 2 cents net gain; while cotton, spurred by the beginning of the last hour, had a net advance of $2.50 a bale.

Cotton Soars Up $1.15 Net

May cotton futures closed at 7.34 against 7.11 for Wednesday's close. This was a net gain of 23 points, 15 of which were added to Wednesday's gain of $2.50 a bale, and to cotton up $3.50 a bale in the last 48 hours.

Not until nearly 1:30 o'clock, when the market was crackling, did the ticker catch up with transactions on the floor. Cotton sold at 7.15 in the morning and into early afternoon were the largest in several years.

Steel Soars Up

United States Steel common stock, which had sold at $46.50, a new 1933 high, dipped to around $42, or $4 under $46.50 advance.

American Telephone & Telegraph, after an initial spurt to $98.50, eased off to $97.75, then dipped slightly.

Wall Street Favorable

NEW YORK—(AP)—Wall Street, clad in a mood of sunny, widely welcomed, the program of controlled inflation launched in Washington Wednesday. Many banking leaders asserted that the United States in the direction of inflation, but pending the actual arrival in the senate and house the members ought to achieve the desired results without the many-sided Roosevelt program.

The inflation plan—to give President Roosevelt wide discretion in fiscal policy—is expected to be offered by Senator Thomas, of Oklahoma, late Thursday as an amendment to the farm bill now in the senate.

The farm bill, meanwhile, advanced through a maze of amendments and much argument.

In view of the impending inflation plan, the senate is not certain of getting done with the farm bill Thursday as hoped.

The house, after a two-day recess, heard Speaker Rayburn tell he opposed the one-cent federal gasoline tax and reduce postage rates on local letters to 2 cents.

Some members, enthusiastic over the inflation action in suspending gold exports,

May Check Radical Plans

Some bankers said in Washington steps evidently constituted a counter attack against dangerously radical inflationary movements. It was explained that the distribution of the $2 present program could act to control its currency and its price level, as Great Britain has done in the past year and a half, and thus avoid anything bordering upon German-Austrian experience with fiat money.

Some banking authorities said the United States had been technically off the international gold standard since the government began buying gold movements during the banking holiday in March, and that further abandonment of the gold standard for the time being, while permitting the dollar to find its own level, with action to other currencies, was a constructive step.

Hope for U. S. Buying

While marked differences of opinion were expressed in banking quarters as to future steps, some authorities expressed hope that the Federal Reserve System again would embark upon an aggressive policy of buying United States government securities.
